Studying with Music, Focus and Schoolwork

Read the text and choose the best answer for each question.

Many students listen to music while they are studying. Some believe that music helps them concentrate better, while others think it makes studying more difficult.

Research shows that the type of music can make a difference. Calm music without lyrics often helps students stay focused. However, music with many lyrics can distract students because the brain tries to follow the words in the song.

Some students say music helps them relax while studying. When they feel relaxed, they may find it easier to concentrate on their homework.

Other students prefer complete silence. They say that even quiet music can interrupt their concentration.

Some teachers allow students to listen to quiet music during independent work. They believe that students should be allowed to choose the study method that helps them concentrate best.

Because every student is different, experts often advise students to try different study environments and discover what works best for them.
